From: Mei
To: Kazuki
Subject: Shopping list for Wednesday's apple scones

Hi Kazuki,
I checked the cupboards in the home economics room today with Ms. Fujita so our cooking club will be ready to bake apple cinnamon scones this Wednesday. Good news: there is already plenty of flour, sugar, baking powder, and cinnamon in the club pantry, so we don't need to buy dry ingredients.

All we need to bring on Wednesday morning are six red apples, two cartons of milk, and two sticks of unsalted butter. Since apples are a bit heavy to carry on the crowded bus, my dad offered to drop me off with the six apples on Wednesday morning. Could you buy the milk and unsalted butter at Green Mart tomorrow evening and bring them in a cool bag with an ice pack?

Keep the store receipt so Ms. Fujita can pay you back from the club budget on Wednesday! Please make sure the butter says "unsalted" on the wrapper.

See you tomorrow,
Mei

Photographs in the Arcade Windows

For over fifty years, Sunrise Shopping Arcade had been the lively center of Willow Town. Recently, however, three family-owned stores had closed, and their shuttered front windows made the covered street look dim and lonely after school. Ninth-grader Hina walked through the arcade every day on her way home from violin lessons and wished the street felt welcoming again.

In October, Hina's social studies class began a project on local history. While visiting the town library's basement archive, Hina found boxes of black-and-white photographs taken in the 1970s. They showed children buying roasted chestnuts, snow piled outside the fish shop, and colorful paper decorations hanging from the arcade roof during summer festivals.

With permission from the library and the landlords of the empty shops, Hina and five classmates enlarged thirty photographs and displayed them neatly behind the glass of the closed storefronts. Beneath each photo, they taped a blank card asking passersby, "Do you remember this day? Tell us your story!"

Within a week, shoppers began stopping to read and write notes: "That boy holding the puppy is my grandfather!" and "This bakery made the best melon bread." On Saturdays, families came just to see the new comments, and two young bakers who visited the display liked the friendly atmosphere so much that they rented one of the empty shops the following spring.

3C Photographs in the Arcade Windows　設問 (26)〜(30)

(26) Why did Sunrise Shopping Arcade look lonely at the beginning of the story?

1 All buses to Willow Town had stopped running.

2 Several family-run shops had closed and left shuttered windows.

3 Students were not allowed to walk through the street after school.

4 Heavy snow had broken the glass roof of the arcade.

(27) What did Hina discover in the basement archive of the town library?

1 Blueprints for building a new suburban shopping mall.

2 Secret recipes from a bakery in another country.

3 Sheet music written by a famous violinist fifty years ago.

4 Old black-and-white photos of daily life in the shopping arcade.

(28) What did Hina and her classmates put below each enlarged photograph?

1 Price tags for buying the old picture frames.

2 A blank card inviting passersby to write their memories.

3 A map showing how to walk to the train station.

4 Coupons for free roasted chestnuts.

(29) How did local residents react to the window display?

1 They covered the glass windows with dark curtains.

2 They moved all the photographs into Hina's classroom.

3 They stopped to look and wrote personal notes about the scenes.

4 They asked the library to take the photographs down right away.

(30) What happened the following spring as an unexpected result of the display?

1 Two young bakers liked the lively street and rented one of the empty shops.

2 Hina's social studies teacher opened a violin school in the library.

3 The shopping arcade was torn down to build a parking lot.

4 All thirty photographs were sold to a television station.
