Borrowing Camping Chairs

From: Uncle Kenji
To: Sota
Subject: Folding chairs for Sunday's barbecue

Hi Sota,
Your dad told me your family is having a riverside barbecue with your soccer teammates this Sunday. Of course you can borrow our four green folding chairs and our cooler box!

On Saturday morning, Aunt Yoko and I will drive to your grandmother's farm, so we won't be home after nine a.m. Could you and your dad stop by tonight around seven thirty, or before eight thirty tomorrow morning? Also, ice packs are already freezing in our garage freezer—take as many as you need!

Have fun on Sunday,
Uncle Kenji

Borrowing Camping Chairs — Questions

(28) What items will Uncle Kenji lend Sota's family?

1 A boat and fishing rods.

2 A soccer goal and four balls.

3 A tent and sleeping bags.

Learning the Sign for "Delicious"

Every Wednesday afternoon, thirteen-year-old Ren stops at Hidamari Bakery near his junior high school to buy warm walnut rolls. Two months ago, a cheerful college student named Mr. Mori started working at the register. Small cards on the counter explained that Mr. Mori was deaf, so customers pointed to bread labels or held up fingers to show how many rolls they wanted.

Ren liked Mr. Mori's bright smile, yet he felt a little sad that he could only nod when leaving. That night, Ren borrowed an introductory Japanese Sign Language book with clear illustrations from the town library. He practiced three phrases in front of his mirror: "Hello," "Thank you," and "Last week's bread was delicious!"

The following Wednesday, after receiving his bag of walnut rolls, Ren tapped his right cheek lightly and touched his chin—the sign for "delicious"—followed by "thank you." Mr. Mori's eyes lit up with surprise. He signed back slowly, teaching Ren the sign for "bread."

Now Ren learns one new sign each week, and their thirty-second chat at the counter is his favorite part of Wednesday.

Learning the Sign for "Delicious" — Questions

(31) How often does Ren visit Hidamari Bakery?

1 Once a month on Sunday.

2 Every morning before school.

3 Every Wednesday afternoon.

4 Only in August.

(32) How did customers usually order bread at Mr. Mori's register?

1 By sending emails from home.

2 By pointing to labels or holding up fingers.

3 By ringing a big bell.

4 By writing long letters.

(33) How did Ren learn his first three signs?

1 He borrowed an illustrated sign language book from the town library.

2 His soccer coach taught him at school.

3 Mr. Mori gave a lecture on TV.

4 He took a summer class in Tokyo.

(34) What sign did Mr. Mori teach Ren at the counter?

1 The sign for "library."

2 The sign for "Wednesday."

3 The sign for "bread."

4 The sign for "mirror."

(35) How does Ren feel about his short conversations with Mr. Mori now?

1 He is too nervous to visit the bakery.

2 They are his favorite part of Wednesday.

3 He thinks sign language is too hard to continue.

4 He wants to switch to another bread shop.
