Why Bookstores Write Hand-Lettered Shelf Cards

Online bookshops can display thousands of customer star ratings on a single screen, yet independent neighborhood bookstores continue to rely on something far simpler: small paper cards taped beneath shelves, written by hand by staff members. At first, spending hours writing individual notes with felt pens might seem inefficient when printed summaries already appear on every back cover.

Back-cover blurbs, however, are written to make every book sound equally thrilling. Readers browsing a quiet shop often want a more honest guide—why this particular mystery suits a rainy Sunday, or which history book explains a complex era without heavy jargon. Because each card carries the staff writer's first name, regular customers soon learn whose taste matches their own. This personal voice helps browsers (21).

Staff members say writing the cards changes how they read as well. Paying attention to who might enjoy an overlooked novel turns stocking shelves from routine labor into (22). Even in a digital age, a three-sentence note from a trusted human reader still moves books off the shelf.

1 avoid reading any fiction published this century

2 memorize the barcode numbers of every shelf

3 finish every 500-page history book in ten minutes

4 discover titles they might never have picked up on their own

1 a thoughtful conversation with the neighborhood

2 a reason to remove all chairs from the store

3 an excuse to stop ordering new books

4 a contest over who has the smallest handwriting

From: Mr. Shinohara, Chorus Club Director
To: Chorus Club Members
Subject: Sunday's recording session in the civic auditorium

Dear members,
This Sunday afternoon, a local radio technician will record two of our songs in the civic auditorium for the winter youth music broadcast. Because the auditorium's microphones are sensitive enough to pick up rustling cloth and clicking jewelry, please wear soft cotton shirts without zippers, metal buttons, or bracelets.

We will enter through the backstage door on the west side at 1:15 p.m.; the front glass doors will stay locked because no audience is attending. Warm-up exercises begin at 1:30 p.m., and recording runs from 2:15 p.m. to 3:45 p.m.

Cold winter air dries vocal cords quickly, so bring a bottle of plain room-temperature water. Please avoid milk tea or sweet juice right before singing, as sugar and dairy can coat your throat and make clear high notes harder. Cough drops may be used during breaks, not while standing on the risers.

Let's enjoy making a recording we'll remember!
Mr. Shinohara

4A Instructions for the Astronomical Choir Recording　設問 (23)〜(25)

(23) Why should members avoid wearing clothes with zippers or metal buttons?

1 They might scratch the wooden backstage door.

2 Sensitive microphones can pick up small noises from clothing and accessories.

3 The radio station will film a costume drama.

4 Metal buttons are too cold in winter.

(24) How will club members enter the civic auditorium on Sunday?

1 Through the front glass doors at 2:15 p.m.

2 Through an underground subway gate.

3 Through the west backstage door at 1:15 p.m.

4 With audience ticket holders at noon.

(25) Why does Mr. Shinohara advise against drinking milk tea or sweet juice right before singing?

1 Drinks of any kind are banned inside the building.

2 Sugar and dairy coat the throat and make singing clear high notes harder.

3 They stain the sheet music folders.

4 Room-temperature water is sold only at the radio station.

How Curved Sidewalk Corners Shape Street Safety

Most pedestrians never think twice about the shape of a street corner where two sidewalks meet. Yet traffic engineers know that the radius of that curve—whether it forms a sharp ninety-degree turn or a wide, sweeping arc—has a direct effect on how fast cars turn and how safely people cross.

During the mid-twentieth century, many cities widened intersection corners into gentle curves so large trucks and buses could turn without slowing down much. While convenient for vehicles, wide curves had two drawbacks for walkers. First, drivers could swing around corners at twenty-five or thirty kilometers per hour while looking mainly for oncoming cars rather than people in the crosswalk. Second, rounding off the corner pushed the curb back, making the painted crosswalk several meters longer for children and older residents to cross.

In recent years, urban planners have been tightening residential and school-zone corners again. A tighter curb forces passenger cars to slow to walking pace before turning, giving drivers an extra second or two to spot someone stepping off the sidewalk. Extending the corner slightly—a design often called a "curb bulb"—also shortens the crossing distance and lets pedestrians see past parked cars without stepping into traffic.

What about fire engines and delivery trucks that still need room to turn? Engineers solve this in creative ways. On some corners, they build a low, textured stone apron beside the curb: ordinary cars stay off the bumpy surface, while the wide wheels of an emergency vehicle can roll slowly over it when necessary.

Small geometric changes in concrete rarely make headlines, yet reshaping a single corner can calm an entire neighborhood crossing every day of the year.

4B How Curved Sidewalk Corners Shape Street Safety　設問 (26)〜(29)

(26) What were two disadvantages of wide, sweeping street corners for pedestrians?

1 Pedestrians had to climb over tall fences to cross.

2 Buses could no longer enter residential neighborhoods.

3 Rainwater froze only on ninety-degree corners.

4 Cars turned faster and crosswalks became longer to cross.

(27) How does a "curb bulb" help people crossing the street?

1 It shortens the crossing distance and improves visibility past parked cars.

2 It allows cars to park right inside the crosswalk.

3 It turns traffic lights green twice as often.

4 It heats the sidewalk during snowstorms.

(28) How do engineers allow fire engines to turn at tightened corners without speeding up ordinary cars?

1 By removing sidewalks altogether near fire stations.

2 By banning passenger cars from turning at intersections.

3 By installing a low, textured stone apron that emergency vehicles can roll over slowly.

4 By building wooden bridges over every house.

(29) What is the author's main message in this passage?

1 Cities should widen every corner so cars never have to slow down.

2 Traffic safety depends only on putting police officers at every corner.

3 Delivery trucks should be banned from all urban roads.

4 Subtle changes in street-corner geometry can steadily improve everyday pedestrian safety.
