Preparing for the Tide-Pool Survey

From: Ms. Morita, Science Club Advisor
To: Science Club Members
Subject: Footwear and rule for Saturday's rocky shore survey

Hi everyone,
Low tide at Isohara Beach will reach its lowest point at 10:20 a.m. this Saturday, giving us ninety minutes to observe sea anemones, hermit crabs, and small tide-pool fish!

Barnacles on wet rocks are as sharp as kitchen graters, so beach sandals with open toes are NOT allowed. Wear old lace-up sneakers or marine boots that cover your ankles, and bring a dry pair of shoes and socks in a plastic bag for the train ride home.

We will photograph creatures inside clear observation trays and release every animal back into the same pool before leaving.

Ms. Morita

(23) Why are open-toed beach sandals prohibited during the rocky shore survey?

1 Train conductors ban beach sandals in stations.

2 The sand is fifty degrees Celsius in winter.

3 Sharp barnacles on wet rocks can easily cut bare feet.

4 Hermit crabs eat rubber straps.

(24) What should members bring in a plastic bag for the train ride home?

1 Wet marine boots from last year.

2 Five hermit crabs to keep as pets.

3 Kitchen graters and heavy rocks.

4 A dry pair of shoes and socks.

(25) What will the club do with the tide-pool creatures after photographing them?

1 Keep them in the school science room all summer.

2 Mail them to an aquarium in Hokkaido.

3 Release every animal back into the same tide pool.

4 Cook them for Saturday lunch.

The Repair Bench at the Shopping Street

For years, an empty shuttered shop stood in the middle of Suzuran Shopping Street in fifteen-year-old Kaito's neighborhood. Fewer people walked past it each month, and neighboring grocers worried the whole arcade was losing its energy.

In April, Kaito's retired grandfather, a former high school woodworking teacher, rented the small space with two old friends—an electrician and a seamstress—and opened "Saturday Fix-It Corner." Every Saturday afternoon, residents brought wobbly dining chairs, quiet transistor radios, or schoolbags with broken zippers. Instead of simply dropping items off, owners sat beside the volunteers and learned how to tighten a loose joint or sew on a sturdy patch themselves.

Kaito began helping at the reception desk twice a month, greeting visitors and writing repair tags. One afternoon, an elementary school boy beamed with pride after gluing his favorite wooden toy train back together with Kaito's grandfather.

Soon, people waiting their turn bought croquettes and green tea from nearby shops, bringing lively conversation back to the once-quiet street.

The Repair Bench at the Shopping Street — Questions

(26) Who opened "Saturday Fix-It Corner" with Kaito's grandfather?

1 Two old friends—an electrician and a seamstress.

2 Two professional soccer players.

3 Kaito's homeroom teacher and principal.

4 A group of elementary school boys.

(27) What was special about how items were repaired at the corner?

1 Broken items were mailed to a factory overseas.

2 Owners sat beside the volunteers and learned how to fix items together.

3 Robots repaired everything in thirty seconds behind a curtain.

4 Each repair cost ten thousand yen.

(28) How did Kaito help out twice a month?

1 He taught woodworking at a high school.

2 He rewired transistor radios by himself.

3 He fried croquettes at the butcher shop.

4 He greeted visitors and wrote repair tags at the reception desk.

(29) Why did an elementary school boy smile proudly one afternoon?

1 He glued his favorite wooden toy train back together with Kaito's grandfather.

2 He won a brand-new bicycle in a lottery.

3 He bought all the green tea on the street.

4 He painted the shop shutters blue.

(30) How did "Saturday Fix-It Corner" help neighboring shops in the arcade?

1 Cars were allowed to drive inside the arcade.

2 All neighboring shops closed early on Saturdays.

3 Grocers stopped selling vegetables and sold radios instead.

4 People waiting their turn bought snacks and tea nearby, reviving the street's liveliness.
