A Notebook Shared by Night Bakers

In a traditional bread shop, bakers often start work at three in the morning, while the counter staff arrive at eight. Because their schedules overlap for only half an hour, small misunderstandings used to happen at Sunrise Bakery. When customers asked whether a new bread contained nuts or honey, the counter staff sometimes had to interrupt the busy bakers to check.

Last spring, an apprentice baker suggested placing a lined notebook beside the cooling racks. Before going home, the morning bakers wrote three short notes about any new recipe: its main ingredients, how it tasted, and how to warm it up at home. This simple habit allowed the counter staff to (21). Customers appreciated getting clear answers right away.

After a month, the counter staff began writing on the opposite page as well. They recorded comments from customers, such as requests for smaller loaves or less sugar. Reading those notes the next morning gave the bakers (22), even though they rarely met the customers face to face.

1 close the shop before eight o'clock every morning

2 bake all the bread by themselves at night

3 stop selling any bread with nuts or honey

4 answer questions accurately without delaying kitchen work

1 useful ideas for improving their recipes

2 a reason to lock the cooling racks

3 fewer varieties of flour to choose from

4 extra hours of sleep in the afternoon

Preparing for the River Photography Contest

From: Naomi Kato, Contest Committee
To: Student Entrants
Subject: Submitting your printed photographs

Dear participants,
Thank you for registering for the Youth River Photography Contest. Online registration closed yesterday, and we are looking forward to seeing your work. Please read the following instructions before bringing your printed photographs next week.

Each entrant may submit up to two photographs taken along the Asahi River this year. Prints must be A4 size and unframed; we will place all entries in matching wooden frames provided by the art hall. Write the title of your photo and your registration number lightly in pencil on the back, not on the front.

Please hand in your prints at the art hall reception desk between Wednesday and Friday, from 1:00 p.m. to 6:00 p.m. If you cannot come during those hours because of classes, a family member or teacher may deliver them in a protective envelope.

All submitted photographs will be displayed from November 14 to November 22. You can pick up your prints during the week after the exhibition ends; we cannot mail them back.

Sincerely,
Naomi Kato

Preparing for the River Photography Contest — Questions

(23) How should entrants prepare their photographs?

1 Put each print in their own metal frame.

2 Leave them unframed and write details on the back.

3 Print their names in ink on the front.

4 Submit three small prints on one sheet.

(24) What can entrants do if they have classes during submission hours?

1 Upload digital files instead of prints.

2 Leave the prints outside the hall at night.

3 Ask a relative or teacher to bring them in an envelope.

4 Bring them on the opening morning of November 14.

(25) How will entrants get their photographs back after the exhibition?

1 Entrants must collect them the week after it closes.

2 The committee will mail them to each school.

3 They can take them home on November 14.

4 Prints will not be returned to anyone.

Why Old Roof Tiles Get a Second Job

Walk through an older Japanese town after a renovation project, and you may see stacks of dark gray clay roof tiles waiting beside a garden wall. Historically, clay tiles were prized because they protected wooden houses from heavy rain and summer heat for decades. Yet when old houses are replaced with modern buildings, thousands of still-solid tiles are removed every year. Disposing of them in landfills takes up space and wastes durable material.

In several regions, landscape designers and town workers have found practical ways to reuse discarded tiles without melting them down. Crushed into small pieces, the baked clay absorbs rainwater and releases it slowly, making it an ideal surface for park paths and tree beds. Unlike dark asphalt, crushed tile paths stay cooler under strong summer sun and allow weeds to be pulled out easily.

Whole tiles are useful as well. Placed upright in rows half-buried in soil, their gentle curves form neat borders around vegetable patches and flower beds. Some community gardens even stack tiles with narrow gaps between them to create cool shelters for frogs and helpful insects that eat garden pests.

Reusing tiles is not completely effortless. Workers must first remove nails, mortar, and cracked pieces with sharp edges so that paths and borders are safe to walk near. Even with this extra sorting step, local towns have found that cleaning and crushing old tiles nearby requires far less energy than manufacturing new concrete blocks and transporting them from distant factories.

For many residents, the greatest benefit is visual as well as environmental. Seeing familiar gray tiles along a new park walkway preserves a quiet connection to the town's past, turning construction waste into part of the neighborhood's character.

Why Old Roof Tiles Get a Second Job — Questions

(26) Why does throwing away removed clay tiles seem wasteful?

1 Clay tiles can only be used for one summer.

2 Modern houses require twice as many clay tiles.

3 Many of the tiles are still strong and take up landfill space.

4 Rainwater immediately destroys clay in landfills.

(27) What is one advantage of covering park paths with crushed tiles?

1 They prevent rainwater from entering the ground.

2 They turn into solid concrete overnight.

3 They keep all insects out of the park.

4 They absorb water and stay cooler than asphalt in summer.

(28) How are whole, unbroken tiles used in some community gardens?

1 As roofs for tall modern apartments.

2 As garden borders and cool shelters for helpful creatures.

3 As mirrors to reflect sunlight onto flowers.

4 As fuel for heating greenhouses in winter.

(29) What must workers do before old tiles can be reused safely?

1 Paint every tile bright white.

2 Ship them to a distant concrete factory.

3 Remove nails, mortar, and sharp broken pieces.

4 Bake them again for several days.
