Borrowing Umbrellas That Actually Come Back

Many train stations keep a basket of free umbrellas near the exit for commuters caught in sudden rain. The idea is generous, yet most stations face the same problem: within a few weeks, the basket is empty. People rarely steal the umbrellas on purpose; instead, once the sky clears, they simply forget to bring them back.

Two years ago, a commuter railway tried a small experiment at five stations. Rather than buying plain black umbrellas, it partnered with a local high school art club. Students painted bright patterns—such as river fish, autumn leaves, and yellow trains—on the handles and panels. Each umbrella also carried a short tag saying which station was waiting for it to "come home." Surprisingly, this design helped (21).

Over six months, more than eighty percent of the painted umbrellas were returned, compared with fewer than thirty percent before. Commuters said an umbrella with a hand-painted tag felt like a borrowed item from a neighbor rather than a disposable object. For the students, seeing their artwork travel through town on rainy evenings became (22). Several other stations have since asked schools along their lines to join the project.

1 stop rain from falling during rush hour

2 reduce the number of passengers using trains

3 remind borrowers to return the umbrellas

4 replace all station roofs with glass

1 a reason to quit the art club

2 an excuse to arrive late for morning classes

3 a problem for local paint stores

4 a source of pride and connection to the community

Notice About Locker Replacement

From: Sports Club Office
To: Pool and Gym Members
Subject: Men's and women's locker rooms next week

Dear members,
Thank you for using Midori Sports Club. On Monday, September 14, and Tuesday, September 15, workers will replace the old coin lockers in both the men's and women's changing rooms with new keyless lockers. During these two days, the swimming pool and changing rooms will be closed.

However, the second-floor fitness gym and running track will remain open as usual. Members who plan to use the gym on Monday or Tuesday should arrive already dressed in workout clothes, as changing spaces will not be available. Small valuables such as phones and keys can be stored in temporary boxes beside the second-floor staff desk.

If you currently rent a monthly private locker, please empty it completely before 8:00 p.m. this Sunday, September 13. Anything left inside will be moved to our office and kept in labeled bags for two weeks.

Thank you for your cooperation,
Midori Sports Club Office

(24) How should members prepare if they visit on Monday or Tuesday?

1 Bring coins for the old lockers.

2 Carry their own padlocks.

3 Come already wearing exercise clothes.

4 Reserve a swimming lane online.

(25) What will happen to items left in monthly lockers after Sunday evening?

1 They will be thrown out immediately.

2 Staff will keep them in labeled bags at the office for two weeks.

3 Workers will lock them inside the new lockers.

4 They will be mailed to members' homes.

Audio Descriptions at Live Theater

Going to see a live play is exciting partly because so much happens without words: an actor glances nervously at a clock, a door slowly opens at the back of the stage, or warm yellow light shifts to cold blue. For theatergoers who are blind or have low vision, however, these silent visual moments can make a story hard to follow if they rely on dialogue alone.

To bridge this gap, more theaters now offer "audio-described" performances. Audience members who request the service wear a lightweight earpiece connected to a small receiver. Sitting in a soundproof booth at the back of the hall, a trained describer watches the stage and speaks quietly into a microphone, slipping short phrases about costumes, facial expressions, and movements into the natural pauses between actors' lines.

Writing good audio description is more delicate than simply listing everything on stage. If a mystery character hides a key in a coat pocket, naming the key too early could spoil a surprise that sighted audience members discover only later. Conversely, saying too little leaves listeners confused when everyone else gasps or laughs. Describers therefore attend rehearsals in advance, consult directors, and time every sentence down to the second.

Some theaters have also introduced "touch tours" thirty minutes before the curtain rises. Visitors who use audio description are invited onto the stage to feel the texture of a velvet cape, examine a wooden prop sword, and walk across the set to understand the distance between rooms. When the play begins, a brief phrase like "she crosses to the oak table" immediately calls up a clear mental picture.

Actors and directors say preparing for these performances often sharpens their own craft as well. Explaining why a gesture or lighting change matters forces the creative team to think carefully about every visual choice on stage.

Audio Descriptions at Live Theater — Questions

(26) How does a theater audio describer deliver information during a play?

1 By stopping the actors after each scene.

2 By handing out printed scripts in large letters.

3 By standing next to the actors on stage.

4 By speaking into a microphone during pauses between lines.

(27) Why must describers be careful when choosing what to say?

1 Too much detail too early might spoil a surprise, while too little causes confusion.

2 Their microphones can only work for five minutes.

3 Directors forbid them from mentioning costumes.

4 Audience members dislike hearing actors' voices.

(28) What is the purpose of a "touch tour" before the performance?

1 To let visitors test the theater's lighting switches.

2 To help listeners feel props, costumes, and stage layout beforehand.

3 To recruit new actors from the audience.

4 To sell handmade souvenirs after the show.

(29) According to the final paragraph, how do these performances benefit actors and directors?

1 They encourage the team to think more carefully about visual choices.

2 They allow plays to finish thirty minutes earlier.

3 They remove the need for stage lighting.

4 They double the price of every theater ticket.
