Why Libraries Lend Sewing Machines and Tools

For generations, people thought of public libraries solely as quiet halls lined with books, magazines, and newspapers. Over the past decade, however, dozens of municipal libraries have added an unexpected shelf near the checkout counter—one stocked with sewing machines, pruning shears, air-quality monitors, and cake pans.

The idea behind a "library of things" is straightforward. Many household tools are genuinely useful twice a year, yet sit gathering dust in a closet for the other fifty weeks. Buying a decent sewing machine just to hem two pairs of curtains is expensive, especially for students or young families living in compact apartments with little storage space. Borrowing equipment with an ordinary library card lets residents (21).

Sharing infrequent tools brings community benefits as well. Librarians often pair popular items with beginner workshops led by retired tailors or carpenters, turning solitary repairs into friendly learning sessions. In this way, lending practical tools extends a library's traditional mission: giving everyone equal access to (22) regardless of income.

1 fill every closet at home with ten identical machines

2 complete occasional projects without spending big money or losing closet space

3 throw away all books on the library's second floor

4 open a commercial factory inside the reading room

1 expired train tickets from other cities

2 private luxury cars and yachts

3 useful skills and everyday resources

4 loud rock concerts after midnight

Instructions for Saturday's Coastal Bird Count

From: Minato Wild Bird Society
To: Student Volunteers
Subject: Checklist for Saturday's winter waterfowl survey

Dear student volunteers,
Thank you for signing up to assist with our annual winter waterfowl count along Minato Bay this Saturday morning. Data collected by teams like yours over the past thirty years helps biologists track how duck and gull populations respond to warmer winters.

We will meet at the Observation Pier parking lot at 7:20 a.m. Because bright red, yellow, or white jackets startle resting flocks from far away, please wear muted colors such as olive green, brown, gray, or navy blue. Binoculars and waterproof tally sheets will be lent to each pair at registration.

Counting three hundred ducks bobbing on waves takes practice! Don't worry about getting an exact single-digit figure on your first try—an experienced leader will walk with every pair and show you how to count birds in groups of ten.

Warmly,
Keiichi Sato, Survey Coordinator

Instructions for Saturday's Coastal Bird Count — Questions

(23) Why are volunteers asked to wear muted colors like brown or gray?

1 Bright jackets cost too much at outdoor stores.

2 Dark clothes dry faster if volunteers swim in the bay.

3 Each volunteer team must match the color of the parking lot.

4 Brightly colored jackets can startle resting birds from a distance.

(24) What items will be lent to each pair at registration?

1 Binoculars and waterproof tally sheets.

2 Cameras with long lenses.

3 Olive-green winter coats.

4 Rubber fishing boats.

(25) How will beginners be helped when counting large flocks on the waves?

1 They will count only one bird per hour.

2 They will watch recorded videos indoors instead.

3 A helicopter will herd the ducks onto dry land.

4 An experienced leader will accompany each pair and teach counting in groups of ten.

Why Supermarkets Mist Vegetables Gently—and Leave Others Dry

Shoppers reaching for lettuce or broccoli in the produce aisle often hear a soft rumble of thunder from hidden speakers just before fine water droplets drift over the greens. Although the sound effect is playful, the misting system itself serves a practical purpose grounded in plant biology.

Even after harvest, leafy vegetables such as spinach, kale, and parsley continue losing moisture through microscopic pores on their leaves. Because these greens have a large surface area and very thin outer skins, dry store air can leave them limp within hours, forcing grocers to throw away otherwise nutritious food. Periodic bursts of cool mist keep humidity high around the leaves and slow down wilting, while the brief sound warning lets customers step back so their sleeves stay dry.

Not every vegetable benefits from a shower, however. Onions, garlic, potatoes, and winter squash are stored in dry bins far from the mist nozzles. Evolved as underground bulbs or thick-skinned storage organs, these crops naturally resist drying out; getting them wet in a warm store actually encourages mold and premature sprouting. Tomatoes and mushrooms likewise spoil faster when damp.

In recent years, several grocery chains have replaced open misting with ultrasonic humidifiers that create fog droplets too tiny to wet surfaces. Because excess water no longer pools at the bottom of display trays, stores report less bacterial rot and longer shelf life.

Knowing how different vegetables respond to moisture helps shoppers at home too: leafy greens stay crisp wrapped in a slightly damp cloth in the fridge, whereas onions belong in a cool, dry basket.

Why Supermarkets Mist Vegetables Gently—and Leave Others Dry — Questions

(26) Why do leafy vegetables like spinach wilt quickly in dry store air?

1 Store lights heat them to sixty degrees Celsius.

2 They have thin outer skins and a large surface area that loses moisture through tiny pores.

3 Customers squeeze every leaf before buying it.

4 Their roots are still growing in heavy soil on the shelf.

(27) Why are onions and potatoes kept away from misting nozzles?

1 Water washes all their vitamins out in five minutes.

2 Mist turns potato skins bright blue.

3 Moisture in a warm store makes them prone to mold and early sprouting.

4 Shoppers refuse to buy round vegetables near lettuce.

(28) What advantage do newer ultrasonic humidifiers have over traditional mist sprays?

1 Their tiny fog droplets humidify the air without pooling water in trays, reducing rot.

2 They play louder thunder music.

3 They cook broccoli on the shelf.

4 They freeze tomatoes solid for winter storage.

(29) What home storage tip can readers learn from the final paragraph?

1 Keep onions and spinach soaking together in a bowl of water.

2 Wrap leafy greens in a slightly damp cloth in the fridge while keeping onions cool and dry.

3 Store all vegetables in direct sunlight on a windowsill.

4 Dry parsley with a hair dryer before eating.
